

FCC,

I would like to take this time and opportunity to express my opinion on telemarketing. There would be nothing to make me happier than outlawing telemarketing. I am a supporter of the do not call list for several reasons. First of all I am an old fashioned person where I like to do business in person, not over the phone. Telephone salesman and telephone information people act like robots and do not have any technique to their business presentation. I also do not like receiving their calls because most times they are disrespectful and do not understand common business courtesy. My third point I would like to make is that they call during dinnertime and nighttime activities, where most people would like to go unbothered, and relax during their time off work. My last reason I do not care for telemarketers calling my house is that most of the time it is some sort of a scam. I bought one "savor" card over the phone two years ago. Everything the sales person said it would do, it did the complete opposite. It did not save me the amount of money it was supposed to, and I could only use it at some of the stores that the salesperson mentioned. My points sum up that if I want something I will go get information on it or inquire about it. I do not like people bothering me about another credit card, or machines to stop telemarketers calling like themselves. This is why we have businesses in this world, so if people were truly interested, they would go on their own behalf to check it out. Tele marking is disrespectful and a bad way to do business.
